Advanced Micro Devices CEO Dirk Meyer said Thursday that the company will deliver high-definition games and movies to devices such as smartphones in an effort to bring greater usability and interactivity to devices. To deliver the content, AMD has announced it will build a supercomputer that will host high-definition games and movies. Technologies such as HD games and movies will change the way content is created and how people interact with their smartphones and computers, Meyer said during a speech at the Consumer Electronics Show in Las Vegas. A visual experience could add more usability to the devices, Meyer said. People will only need a web browser on a smartphone and a decent broadband connection to access the supercomputer instantly to play games or watch Blu-ray movies, Meyer said. The supercomputer, which will be called the Fusion Render node, will change the way games and movies are delivered to mobile devices, Meyer said. This will bring a petaflop performance, matching other supercomputers and making it the fastest graphic supercomputer in the world, Meyer said. The Fusion Render Node also has many inherent advantages over the supercomputer, Meyer said. It will consume a tenth of the power of a supercomputer when mounted in a room, rather than a hall, like some other supercomputers. The graphics supercomputer is basically a stand of high-performance desktop computers with ATI 4800 series graphics cards and Phenom II processors connected to each other and crunching tasks simultaneously. The GPU and CPU will work in coherent mode, but petaflop performance is based primarily on the GPU's floating line capabilities, said John Taylor, an AMD spokesman. The system can be expanded by adding additional game sets to the stand. In an on-stage presentation, Jules Urbach, founder and CEO of Otoy, showed more ATI graphics cards from multiple computers that work together to deliver a first-person shooter over a wired connection to a client device. Otoy is a software company that helps deliver graphics content from the server farm to client devices and works with AMD to create hd graphics delivery technology. Suddenly we take one of the most complicated games in the world and put it on the website. It's huge, Urbach said. The server will be ready by the second half of the year. All you need is an iPhone.... [or] laptop to use, said AMD Taylor. AMD is assembling graphics delivery technology into the cloud computing model, where programs are hosted on servers and delivered to consumers over the network. The technology is easily accessible and easy to use, Meyer said. Mobile computing will never be the same, and cloud computing really has the ability to open up new vistas for both the film and gaming industries, Meyer said. Now we are ready for a big leap forward in visual computing as well as mobile computing, he said. Known for his processor innovations, Meyer didn't talk about CPUs, instead Focus on AMD's attempts to add realism to games and entertainment on the PC. I promised not to reference Moore's law during the presentation, and I didn't, Meyer said. Note: When you buy something by clicking on the links in our articles, we can get a small commission. (Pocket-lint) - Whether you're the kind of person who watches something feature-length every night, or you just want to set up in your home, which means that the occasional movie night is a little more engaging than just using a TV would be, home projectors are an excellent choice. Best 4K TV: Premium Ultra HD TVs to buy today They're a great way to get a really big-screen experience without having to leave your home, and dimming the lights on a project movie or TV show still has a sense of occasion that's nice and fun. There are countless projectors out there to choose from, though, including a wide range of much more expensive 4K projectors, but for this list, we'll focus on full HD projectors. We've rounded up some of the best on the market for your browsing pleasure. Amazonsquirrel_widget_231769Epson has nailed two of the most important factors when it comes to the big projector - price and image quality. It's pretty hard, and very risky, to look for something much cheaper than this unit and still get a decent product, but that doesn't mean it's a bargain-bin It has an excellent display with brightness and great contrast, and you can tune the image down to between 30 and 300 inches, making it great, although the size you project it may be subject to change. If you are looking for a full HD projector, this is the obvious choice for our money. Amazonsquirrel_widget_233094It's a good piece of more expensive, but the LG projector makes up for price increases with some great quality-of-life features. It's an ultra-short-throw projector, which means it goes right against the wall you'll be viewing on it, and it's great if you don't screw anything to the ceiling or pull out a large unit whenever you need it. In fact, it's borderline portable. The picture, meanwhile, is really solid, too, although it can't compete with a larger projector in terms of brightness, so you'll need a muted room. The reality is that this is a projector pick up if you know you won't use it often, but want flexibility as part of the package. Amazonsquirrel_widget_233107With impressive brightness for the price, the ViewSonic projector is a great alternative to the Epson we put in our top spot, although it will cost a little more. It also manages a great depth of color and really variety. It's not much of a looker, but it's not of the greatest interest when it comes to the projector, so if it has a bit of utilitarian style on it you can probably forgive it. The fan can also be a little loud in operation, but the reality is that the image quality easily makes up for small disadvantages. Pocket-lintsquirrel_widget_233108You can pick up a standard W2000 if you want to save a little money and still get a great experience, but we like the extra brightness that the Plus model brings to the table, which is so key to enjoying your projection experience. This is a super projector, even managed to pack capable loudspeakers for a great all-round package. It's also easy to set up and works nicely if you're planning a game as well - smoothing mode works nicely for all the Call of Duty: Warzone sessions you'd like to set up. Amazonsquirrel_widget_233133That said that we have focused more on the gaming side of things for our final pick - after all, for a large number of people image quality is most important when they are playing games, although not many projectors aim directly at this market. This model from Optoma does just that, with impressive results. The key here is the lack of input lag, which is very short for the projector at this price point, and means that you can play with full response, which other competitors will noticeably miss. It's the perfect package if you want to blow up all enemies on a blown-up screen. Writing by Max Freeman-Mills. Freeman-Mills.
